SECOND SIGHT

University of California Press, 1993. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. Dust Jacket Condition: New DJ. First Edition NL with 1. University of California Press 1993 First Edition NL with 1 New/New DJ Editorial Reviews From The experience of recovering vision after 15 years of blindness is captured in journal entries made by Hine, emeritus professor of history at UC Riverside. Told at age 20 that he would eventually become blind, Hine, aided by his wife, coped with diminishing sight, finishing graduate school, progressing in his academic career and even finding ironic humor in the notion of research by a person of low vision. When total blindness came at the age of 50, it lasted 15 years, a not unhappy period, as Hine, now fluent in Braille and assisted by advanced computer technology, lived in a lively world of sound and touch. Then a high-risk operation restored partial vision to one eye, and he was catapulted into a new world where vision was dominant. Despite his joy at independence, he also felt some ambivalence at the loss of the precisely ordered lifestyle blindness had imposed on him. Hine reflects on the published attitudes of blind writers, as he effectively conveys the texture of his well-lived and well-appreciated life. 1993 This story of a man who gradually lost his sight while finishing graduate school and becoming a history professor grew out of a journal written after a risky eye operation restored partial sight to one eye. The experience so overwhelmed Hine that he sought out books by blind people, among them John Hull's Touching the Rock ( LJ 3/1/91). In Hull, he found a fellow professor who knew blindness but was not as fortunate to have partial sight restored. Hine also felt kin with other writers such as James Thurber and Eleanor Clark....
